

Little Red Riding Hood

An abridged Brothers Grimm fairy tale

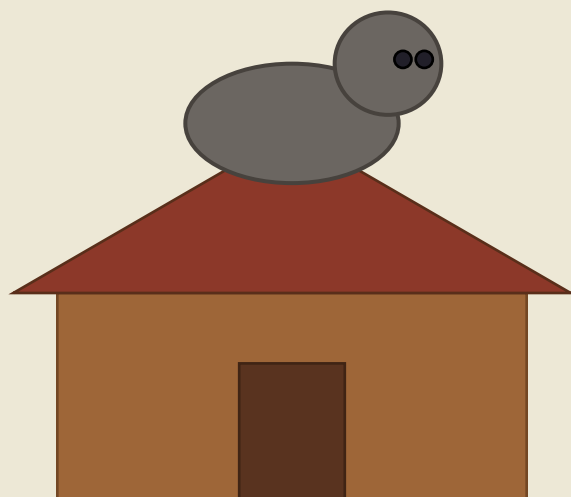

3. At grandmother's door

The wolf knocked at the cottage door. "Who is there?" called the grandmother. "Little Red Riding Hood," said the wolf, disguising his voice, "with cake and wine." The door was unlatched, and the wolf sprang upon the bed. When Red Riding Hood arrived, she thought her grandmother looked very strange. "Grandmother, what big eyes you have!" "The better to see you with, my child." "What big teeth you have!" "The better to eat you with!"

4. The huntsman

The wolf had scarcely swallowed Red Riding Hood when a huntsman passed by the cottage. He thought the old woman snored strangely and looked inside. He cut open the wolf's belly with his scissors, and Red Riding Hood sprang out, frightened but unhurt. They filled the wolf's stomach with heavy stones; when he woke and tried to flee, he sank and was never seen again. Red Riding Hood went home, and never again left the path.
