1. Into the woods

Once upon a time there was a sweet little girl whom everyone loved. Her grandmother gave her a little cap of red velvet, and because she would wear nothing else, she was called Little Red Riding Hood. One day her mother said, "Take this cake and bottle of wine to your grandmother; she has been ill. Go quietly and do not leave the path." Red Riding Hood promised, took her basket, and set out through the wood.

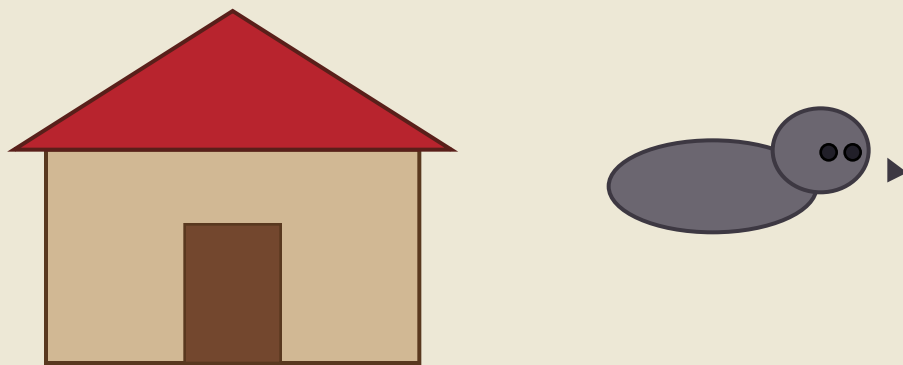

2. The wolf on the path

The wolf had been watching the house. When Red Riding Hood entered the wood, he came up and asked where she was going. "To my grandmother," she said, "who lives beyond the mill under the three great oak-trees." The wolf thought, "What a tender young creature ? what a nice plump mouthful!" But he did not dare eat her in daylight, so he walked beside her and asked about the flowers. Red Riding Hood looked around at the blossoms and stepped deeper into the wood.

3. At grandmother's door

While Red Riding Hood gathered flowers, the wolf ran straight to the grandmother's house and knocked. "Who is there?" "Little Red Riding Hood, with cake and wine." "Lift the latch and come in," said the grandmother. The wolf sprang in, swallowed the old woman whole, put on her cap and nightgown, and lay down in the bed with the curtains drawn.

4. All is well again

When Red Riding Hood arrived she found the door open and the room strange. "Grandmother, what big eyes you have!" "The better to see you with, my child." "Grandmother, what big teeth you have!" "The better to eat you with!" cried the wolf, and leaped from the bed. A huntsman heard the cry, rushed in, and rescued them both. The grandmother drank the wine, ate the cake, and Red Riding Hood promised never again to stray from the path.
